In his book, We're Killing Ourselves, Jules Verne takes a hard look at the environmental crisis and offers a sobering assessment of the future. Verne argues that we are on a path to self-destruction, and that we need to take immediate action to change course.

Verne's book is divided into three parts. The first part provides a comprehensive overview of the environmental challenges we face. Verne discusses climate change, pollution, deforestation, and other environmental issues. He also examines the root causes of these problems, such as our reliance on fossil fuels and our unsustainable consumption habits.

The second part of the book offers a series of practical solutions for how we can address the environmental crisis. Verne discusses renewable energy, energy efficiency, sustainable agriculture, and other solutions. He also argues for the need for a change in our values and our way of life.

The third part of the book is a call to action. Verne urges us to take action now to save our planet. He argues that we need to make changes in our own lives, and that we need to work together to create a more sustainable future for all.

We're Killing Ourselves is a must-read for anyone who cares about the future of our planet. This book provides a comprehensive overview of the environmental challenges we face, and it offers practical solutions for how we can address these challenges and create a more sustainable future.
